“John”, a special education student at a local high school, has experienced trauma from consistent bullying. In addition, he had difficulty communicating with his teachers. This was the root of several suspensions and eventually, an expulsion which led him to an alternative high school.

A United Way funded agency stepped in and gave him counseling, tutoring, and support to help him feel confident in communicating with his classmates and teachers, plus helped him with his classwork. John is now caught up on all homework, in line for graduation and no longer being bullied.
